

Special Issue

Migration, Citizenship and Social Rights

Message from the Guest Editors

The Special Issue aims to explore historical and contemporary issues surrounding the benefits conferred by both citizenship and liminal immigration statuses, as well as those granted and denied to undocumented immigrants. Research areas may include (but not limited to) the following:

- National and transnational legal frameworks impacting migrants' access to social rights;
- The influence of political narratives on immigrants' access to social rights and social incorporation;
- Shifting conceptions of citizenship during times of heightened political attention to international migration;
- Influences of neoliberalism, isolationism and populism on immigrants' access to resources and social rights;
- The intersection of race, gender and nationality and immigrants' access to social rights;
- Historical and comparative perspectives on immigrants' access to social rights without citizenship;
- Asylum seekers and their social rights while awaiting asylum decisions;
- Variable access to social rights at different moments in the life course for noncitizens;
- Intergenerational impacts of limited social rights in mixed-status families.

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Social Sciences is an international open access peer-reviewed journal publishing the latest research across all disciplines of the social sciences including anthropology, criminology, economics, education, geography, history, law, linguistics, political science, psychology, social policy, social work, sociology and related areas. The journal is especially interested in interdisciplinary research, and aims to facilitate the interaction and communication between different social scientific disciplines. The journal welcomes conventional length articles as well as shorter Research Notes or short articles, as long as they meet the journal's standards of quality and originality.
