Maritime transport is hugely important in global trade, comprising more than 90% of trade if measured in cargo miles. However, it also contributes to global greenhouse gas emissions. As such, maritime transport carries a huge responsibility to save energy and cut emissions.

This Special Issue will combine studies and results not only from naval architecture and logistics, but various other fields of research, regarding how maritime transport can become more energy efficient and environmentally friendly by reducing global emissions.

Topics may include (but are not limited to) ship design and operation, alternative propulsion, renewable energies, engine design and optimization, and maritime transport logistics. We look forward to receiving papers on theoretical and practical studies, holistic (and cross disciplinary) approaches, as well as detailed design optimizations, which will help to reduce the environmental impact of maritime transport.

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

I encourage you to contribute a research or comprehensive review article for consideration for publication in Sustainability, an international open access journal which provides an advanced forum for research findings in areas related to sustainability and sustainable development. The journal publishes original research articles, reviews, conference proceedings (peer reviewed full articles) and communications. I am confident you will find the journal contributes to enhancing understanding of sustainability and fostering initiatives and applications of sustainability-based measures and activities.
