Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

The COVID-19 pandemic has wreaked havoc on the global economy, causing business failure and global recession. Consequently, previously planned investments in sustainable projects, energy efficiency, and environmental preservation are expected to experience downward revisions. The significant pandemic-induced slowdown in economic activities affects sustainable projects negatively. Thus, it poses a significant threat to sustainable economic growth. Accordingly, new economic and business policies may be required to curtail these negative effects of the pandemic on sustainable projects.

This Special Issue of Sustainability is seeking theoretical, empirical, and policy-oriented papers which deal with the future of business success through sustainability in the post-COVID-19 world.
