This Special Edition accepts studies that consider the environmental, social, and economic aspects of innovation and its development at different levels, from the perspective of products, processes, companies, sectors, supply chains, regions, or economies. In this context, studies on eco-innovation are acceptable as a positive change aimed at making significant or visible progress toward sustainable development by reducing environmental impacts or achieving a more efficient and responsible use of natural resources. It will also be open to studies dealing with eco-innovation focused on the re-use of natural resources according to the principle of the circular economy, as well as other related arguments in the form of specialized and interdisciplinary manuscripts.
