Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

The continued threat of COVID-19 has led to a considerable surge in the amount of information available on pandemics and epidemics in the last six months. Thus, a thorough analysis of the current pandemic will determine how soon the global economic and financial system is likely to recover and help in preparing for future outbreaks.

The purpose of this Special Issue is therefore to provide a platform for researchers to examine the challenges posed by pandemics to humanity and suggest ways of overcoming them. The issue welcomes original research articles, case studies, reviews, and critical perspectives in various aspects that establish the link between pandemics and sustainability using econometric tools.

Keywords: pandemics; coronaviruses; COVID-19; sustainable development; financial market; supply chain management; environmental pollution; big data; climate change; global demography; perception; applied econometrics.
