Message from the Guest Editors

The Special Issue aims at gathering a better understanding of the determinants of corporate green communications and the role of psychosocial factors in shaping stakeholders' perceptions and reactions. This Special Issue invites papers addressing these topics, especially those with reasons leading organisations communicate their green commitment, how different communications are perceived by stakeholders and the role of psychosocial factors in green communication, considering not only the individual but also the group, organizational, and system levels.

Research areas may include (but are not limited to) the following:

- corporate social responsibility (CSR);
- psychosocial determinants;
- green communication;
- greenwashing;
- green and ecological marketing;
- sustainability communication;
- communicating sustainable business models;
- corporate environmentalism and green image;
- stakeholders' reaction to greenwashing;
- stakeholders' outcomes of CSR;
- stakeholders' perception;
- life cycle marketing strategies;
- environmental concern;
- green orientation;
