Message from the Guest Editor

After decades of rapid socio-economic development, many Asian countries are in an era characterized by major socio-economic and political change. Modern trends are steadily causing significant land use/cover changes. Land over-use and under-use, among others, are novel phenomena that deserve more attention and deliberate scrutiny. Studies of these new trends may assist academic and public policy communities with forecasting future land use/cover change in Asian countries, as well as with addressing related issues.

This Special Issue of Sustainability will be comprised of papers that reveal novel empirical land use/cover related experiences from Asia. You are being invited to participate by submitting your relevant work for consideration. Interdisciplinary approaches are highly welcome.
