Message from the Guest Editors

Please consider sharing your recent work in this Special Issue of Sustainability, “Engineering Education for a Sustainable Energy Future.” We welcome a range of submissions, including research manuscripts, case studies, reviews, and commentaries, all related to the broad topics of this Special Issue. With its direct connections to a range of societal and environmental conditions such as climate change, energy itself may well be the key sustainability issue we must address in the immediate future. Effective education, in terms of both WHAT we teach as well as HOW we teach, will help to prepare emerging leaders to take on this challenge and successfully shift us toward a sustainable energy future. The entire engineering community has a role to play, and contributions relevant for single disciplines, interdisciplinary, and multidisciplinary integrations with engineering are of interest. We look forward to preparing an issue that engages the sustainability education community with a variety of meaningful and thought-provoking submissions.
