Message from the Guest Editor

This Special Issue focuses on the latest research conducted in the field of evaluation and optimization of transportation systems, taking into account the trends in people's mobility and goods movements. Its aim is to present findings about the sustainability of revolutionary transportation paradigms and highlight validated methodologies applied for their measurement, assessment, and evaluation. It covers topics related to the sustainability pillars (transportation, economy, environment, society) and enablers (satisfaction, acceptance, adoption, uptake). Both original research and review papers are welcome.
