Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

The aim of this Special Issue is to showcase the progress made in current research and the literature on inclusive tourism, considered in the context of different concepts of sustainable development.

In particular, this Special Issue of the peer reviewed journal Sustainability aims to expand the discussion and scholarly debate on different perspectives, trends, approaches, cases, impacts, challenges, models, and/or frameworks related to inclusive tourism.

Inclusive tourism is broadly understood as ensuring that everybody has access to and enjoys spaces, communities, land, hospitality, services, food, paths, and mobility. In this way, it contributes to social wellbeing, bringing happiness to people and ensuring that everybody, with no exceptions, is able to enjoy the beauty of tourist places and participate in various tourist activities.

The development of inclusive tourism aims not only to expand access to consumption, production, and benefit sharing at existing tourist destinations but also to draw a new map of tourist places and experiences and the interactions that accompany them.
