Message from the Guest Editors

The global vaccination campaign against COVID-19 is a large economic, societal and also environmental challenge. This Special Issue collects contributions from different disciplines due to the complex challenges associated with the vaccination campaign: Economics and business administration, engineering, computer science, political and social science are supported in joining the discussion. Different steps, such as efficient and rapid vaccine production, storage, distribution and final administration of different types with the included physical as well as information flows and coordination are within the scope of the papers included. The overarching research question is how logistics and supply chain management concepts could contribute to a successful vaccination campaign against COVID-19 in order to support a global way out of the pandemic.
