Message from the Guest Editors

Climate change is increasingly shaping people's everyday lives, particularly in communities that have contributed least to it. Scientific research provides the primary source of evidence on the drivers and impacts of climate change; it is also being used to inform policies on mitigation and adaptation. Critical voices have argued both that this research often moves from informing to limiting public discussion (Blue, 2016), and that the language and practices of science obscure the attribution of responsibility for climate change: 'we' are not all climate change actors, and many communities leave small anthropogenic footprints (Jacquet, 2013; Molek-Kozakowska, 2018).

This Special Issue invites papers from a range of disciplines that turn the spotlight on everyday knowledge and everyday lives. Articles that explicitly engage with social inequalities and the legacies of colonialism are welcome. We are looking for both original research articles and comprehensive reviews.

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

I encourage you to contribute a research or comprehensive review article for consideration for publication in Sustainability, an international Open Access journal which provides an advanced forum for research findings in areas related to sustainability and sustainable development. The journal publishes original research articles, reviews, conference proceedings (peer-reviewed full articles) and communications. I am confident you will find the journal contributes to enhancing understanding of sustainability and fostering initiatives and applications of sustainability-based measures and activities.
