Message from the Guest Editor

Dear Colleagues,

These are wide-ranging topics, and this Special Issue invites contributions that explore issues of sustainability related to the longevity of cultural heritage, but also our varied responses to its management, protection, reconstruction and strategic replanning. Considering the long-term implications of our actions relating to cultural heritage is critical: do we really think long-term, i.e., the sustainability dimension; or do we too often respond to short-term opportunities, e.g., funding availability, opinion change or even the availability of new technology and materials? The impact of management practices, changes, and especially reconstructions on how cultural heritage is perceived, valued and used/consumed must be considered too. Papers exploring these issues from different disciplinary perspectives, different cultures, different legal/planning systems, and covering different historical periods, are welcomed. Comparative papers are particularly welcomed, as are contributions from areas and cultures under-represented in academic and professional heritage debates.
