The world is witnessing an unprecedented upheaval in supply chain and logistics. Economic, social, and environmental changes create conditions, amplify, and accelerate what were once one-in-a-generation events. Companies are plunged into emergency mode fighting for their survival and charting unknown territory like never before. To find a way out of recurring crises, managers need guidance on how to redeploy operational resources and build resilience to high impact events.

This Special Issue stimulates debate and discussion on the latest advances in supply chain and logistics management to cope with emergent emergencies and sustainability.
