Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

Decision-making appears to be a major concern in the face of adverse climate change impacts in order to ensure local and global sustainability. We hope to provide critical knowledge on climate change and potential climate change mitigation measures through evidence-based research and its implications. New research insights can provide guidelines for the next generation by ensuring environmental and social sustainability. Our Special Issue extends the scope of how climate change impacts threaten world food security through damaging agricultural systems from scientific and social perspectives, how people adapt to climate-induced food insecurity locally, and which knowledge and practices might be effective or contribute to reducing risks. We welcome research on agro-meteorology, climate change mitigation, agricultural adaptation, climate-induced food insecurity, agricultural sustainability, and relevant policies that could contribute to secure food and policy formulations. For this purpose, empirical and theoretical research is welcome.

We look forward to receiving your contributions.
