Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue seeks papers regarding how organizations can and should sustainably adjust their management and operations to adapt to the current era of uncertainty. We employ a wide definition of crisis, including climate and environmental stress, financial and economic crisis, consequences of the COVID-19 pandemic, and other triggers and settings. We encourage contributions from all fields, particularly from multidisciplinary and interdisciplinary approaches.

Original research articles and reviews are welcome. Research areas may include (but not limited to) the following:

- Business risk under crisis: reputational, financial, social, political.
- The social role of business in crisis settings.
- Relationships and tensions between sustainable development and business.
- Business and peacebuilding, business and conflict.
- Business and globalization challenges.
- The climate crisis and corporate sustainability.
- Lessons from COVID-19.
- Business, inequality, and development.
- Theoretical papers on crisis and development.
- Empirical / case study papers on particular businesses working through crisis.
