Message from the Guest Editors

In recent years, more than ever, both environmental science and engineering, and sustainable development, by definition and content, have undergone an unprecedented evolution. We considered that a Special Issue focused on "environmental sciences and sustainable development" has its well-deserved place, trying to gather data and studies on the directions mentioned, and that make reference to the following terminology and fields: Ecology, ecosystems, pollution, environmental recovery, environmental health, "one health," zero waste, etc. Sustainable development in all areas that allow and require it (industry, agriculture, local development management/construction and business management, etc.), policies, strategies, and legislation in the field, etc. Development of the clean, cleaning/depollution technologies and techniques dedicated to environmental remediation. Other topics in the field that potential authors will consider appropriate to the so comprehensive and generous theme of this Special Issue.
