

Special Issue

Technologies for a Sustainable Future: Towards Sustainable Energy Supply, Second Edition

Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue aims to collect the state of the art of technological, political and economic solutions for the use of energy capable of favoring what is called "development of well-being", without setting geographical or time limits. Particular attention will be devoted to the production of electricity from renewable sources, but, in general, contributions are welcome that deal with processes that improve energy efficiency, which compare the real costs of conventional conversion processes with innovative ones, which analyze the economic and which define policies for the large-scale diffusion of smart solutions and reports of successful actions in the implementation of smart solutions. The objective of the Special Issue is to provide information from a technological, economic and social policy point of view, useful for undertaking actions capable of promoting sustainable use of energy.
