

Special Issue

Sustainable Tourism, Cultural Heritage and Corporate Social Responsibility in Urban Environment

Message from the Guest Editors

Improving urban environment and promoting urban sustainable development has gradually become the main theme of urban construction. As the COVID-19 epidemic continues to spread, restoration and protection of cultural heritage, urban renewal and sustainable tourism are emerging as new engines of regional economic growth in the world. Moreover, as for tourism and cultural heritage in the urban environment, the integration of corporate social responsibility strategies is also becoming more and more important. The topics for the Special Issue include, but are not limited to, the following:

- What is the impact of climate change on tourism development?
- What is the relationship between extreme weather and tourism, and what is the impact of climate comfort on regional tourism development.
- What are the effects of grave public health events such as COVID-19 on sustainable tourism and cultural heritage?
- What is the relationship between sustainable tourism, cultural heritage and corporate social responsibility in urban environments?
- What role can firms play in effectively responding to the pandemic and promoting sustainable tourism development?
