Tourism and Environmental Development: A Sustainable Perspective

Message from the Guest Editors

As tourism continues expanding globally, its impact on our society has become a critical issue. In particular, the impact of tourism on sustainability, and methods for mitigating the negative effects of tourism, have been greatly studied and contested within the tourism and hospitality fields. By exploring how tourism can either contribute to, or undermine, comprehensive sustainability, this Special Issue will could inform policies and practices that foster long-term benefits for both tourist resorts and local communities. For this Special Issue, we welcome original research articles and reviews. Possible research areas include (but are not limited to) the following:

- Developments in tourism and sustainability;
- Residents' emotional solidarity or anger towards developments in tourism;
- Challenges in over- and under-tourism;
- Innovative approaches to balancing growth and sustainability in tourism;
- Tourists' behaviors and sustainability;
- Industry best practices.

We look forward to receiving your contributions.
