

Special Issue

Recreation, Tourism and Sport in the Outdoors

Message from the Guest Editors

The journal Sustainability is devoting a Special Issue to the analysis of the sustainability of recreation, leisure activities, tourism and sports in the outdoors. This issue emphasizes sustainability from four main perspectives: (1) nature as a place for outdoor activities (e.g., forests, meadows, waterfronts, parks, green areas, gardens, landscapes and open-air museums); (2) locals, athletes, visitors and tourists and their needs and benefits from the outdoors (e.g., walking, horse riding, cycling, hiking, etc.); (3) balance and confirmation between different segments and target groups; (4) dialogue between nature conservation and human activities outdoors.

The aim of this Special Issue is to present empirical, conceptual research papers and methodological developments based on applied research. This Special Issue is an excellent platform to submit interdisciplinary research papers related to social science, natural science, information technology, and economic tourism.
