

Special Issue

Sustainable Urban Planning and Regional Development: 2nd Edition

Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue aims to explore the urban–rural divide in depth, discussing its dynamics, the challenges it presents, and potential strategies for integrating rural and urban areas or rebalancing territorial development. It seeks contributions that integrate theoretical reflections, practical experiences, and case studies based on territorial evidence, fostering dialogue between different disciplines and methodological approaches on various topics. These include, among others, the depopulation and marginalization of rural areas; urban and territorial planning; urban–rural connections; physical and functional interdependencies between cities, suburban and rural municipalities; spatially targeted strategies; spatial approaches to measure subnational inequality; digital technologies and artificial intelligence for territorial development; and tourism, culture, and landscape as tools for rebalancing and enhancing territories.
