

Special Issue

Sustainability and Innovation in Tourism and Hospitality Development

Message from the Guest Editors

The Special Issue considers the importance of innovation in tourism and hospitality, as well as the multidisciplinary practices, principles and impacts associated with innovation and sustainability, seeking to address the sector's complex and intangible nature. In the context of social and cultural sustainability, research related to community participation, cultural heritage conservation and tourism education will also be accepted in the context of innovation. Regarding economic sustainability, studies addressing local economic development and entrepreneurship, prevention of economic leakage and seasonality management will be accepted. In the area of governance and policy, this Special Issue also welcomes research related to regulation, certification and incentives to promote sustainable practices, collaborative governance and sustainability indicators and metrics. In the field of tourism companies and institutions, this Special Issue invites studies related to innovation in the design and marketing of sustainable products and services, green human resources and leadership for sustainability.
