AI-Driven Technology for Sustainable Living

Message from the Guest Editor

The quality of our daily life is co-determined by critical factors, such as the environment, infrastructure, energy, climate, etc. Emerging technologies profoundly transform our lives. As such, artificial intelligence (AI) has extensively advanced current transportation, public security, and healthcare, catalyzing the revolution of human livelihood. This Special Issue aims to promote the development of sustainable-oriented research for accelerating innovation in critical areas related to sustainable living. We would like to invite the scientific community to submit their research related to AI-driven technologies focusing on sustainability. Contributions can include, but are not limited to, the following: climate change, sustainable public health, sustainable development, artificial intelligence, healthcare, sensors, environmental sust
