

Special Issue

Biocultural Diversity and Nature Conservation

Message from the Guest Editors

The aim of this Special Issue on “Biocultural Diversity and Nature Conservation” is to stimulate learning and debate on the role of biocultural and conservation approaches in understanding the relationship between local cultures and natural environments. The main scope of this Special Issue is to capture new insights through contributions related to biocultural diversity and nature conservation from cross-sectoral fields of social-ecological systems for the development of new ideas, knowledge, approaches, policies, and learning on sustainability science. This Special Issue of Sustainability accepts submissions for reviews that combine topics on biocultural diversity and nature conservation. All scientific disciplines are welcome.
