Post-pandemic Cities and Buildings: Strategies to Increase Their Adaptive Capacity and Environmental Health

Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue focuses on research proposals or studies regarding how to improve the way we think about cities and buildings (from different possible perspectives, e.g., urban regeneration and buildings retrofit, mobility, housing, energy production and use, urban agriculture, data sharing, ICTs, etc.), which have a strong contribution to improving the environmental health and cities adaptive capacity to outbreaks, and that look at cities holistically, i.e., understanding the systems that make up the city and the interdependencies and risks they may face.
