City 4.0: Urban Planning and Development in the Age of Digital Transformation

Message from the Guest Editors

The combination of the computer and distributed networks during the last several decades has led to two 'Digital Revolutions' that today allow anyone to create, disseminate, and access any information anywhere, any time and from any smart device. The birth of the 'Digital' Age' is a result of a research ecosystem that was nurtured by government spending and military-industryacademia collaboration, along with the alliance of community organisers, communal-minded hippies, doit-yourself hobbyists and homebrew hackers. This Special Issue invites papers reviewing, empirically exploring or theoretically expanding the City 4.0 concept and practice from the angle or urban planning and development (or in simple terms, urban planning and development in the age of Industry 4.0). We welcome manuscripts that contribute to conceptualisation, policy, strategy, legislation, process or practice or at their interfaces, in the form of empirical research articles, systematic literature reviews, case reports, viewpoints, perspectives and short communication pieces.
