Corruption in Sustainable Health Care

Message from the Guest Editor

Corruption is defined by the leading global anti-corruption organization, Transparency International, as, “the misuse of entrusted power for private gain.” The United Nations Office of the High Commissioner on Human Rights emphasizes that corruption is an “enormous obstacle to the realization of all human rights,” and has stated that transparency, accountability, non-discrimination, and meaningful participation are effective means to fight corruption. This Special Issue will provide examples of the mechanisms that can best reduce the risk of corruption and why. For further reading, please visit the Special Issue website.

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

I encourage you to contribute a research or comprehensive review article for consideration for publication in Sustainability, an international open access journal which provides an advanced forum for research findings in areas related to sustainability and sustainable development. The journal publishes original research articles, reviews, conference proceedings (peer reviewed full articles) and communications. I am confident you will find the journal contributes to enhancing understanding of sustainability and fostering initiatives and applications of sustainability-based measures and activities.
