Sustainable Development, Sustainable Policy, and Innovation: A Scholarly Inquiry into Corporate Brands and Investor Behavior

Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue, titled 'Sustainable Development, Sustainable Policy, and Innovation: A Scholarly Inquiry into Corporate Brands and Investor Behavior', is meticulously curated to shine a spotlight on the multifaceted and intertwined relationships among sustainable development, sustainable policies, innovation, corporate brands, and investor behavior. This Special Issue is set to make a significant and unique contribution to the existing body of literature. Historically, research has often compartmentalized these aspects, studying them in isolation. However, this Special Issue breaks new ground by emphasizing the interconnections between these aspects. By bridging the gaps between sustainable development, sustainable policies, innovation, corporate brands, and investor behavior, this Special Issue will present a more holistic view. Through the presentation of novel research findings and fresh theoretical insights, this Special Issue will not only enrich this interdisciplinary field, but also serve as a valuable resource for future research, practice, and policy-making.
