

Special Issue

Advanced Studies in Economic Growth, Environment and Sustainability—2nd Edition

Message from the Guest Editors

The aim of this Special Issue is to present an updated set of studies, theoretical ideas, and methodological developments that deal with the economic growth–environment–sustainability nexus. Loosely, we look for papers addressing issues related to the climate and environmental risk management regarding water, land, and soil. This Special Issue will include, but is not limited to, the following topics: i) how economic growth contributes to sustainable development; ii) how sustainability contributes to mitigating climate change; iii) the introduction of good practices in sustainable development that enhance environment; iii) the implications of different contexts, namely the good use of water, energy, and fossil fuel combustion; iv) the implications of adopting corporate governance, market structure, and geographical, cultural, and gender aspects, etc.; and v) exploring the moderating effects in the relationship between economic growth and sustainable development. Keywords:

- economic growth
- environmental degradation
- climate change
- sustainable development
- water management
- governance
