

Special Issue

Sustainable Consumption Economics: Impact on the Environmental Management of Products and Services

Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue entitled "Sustainable Consumption Economics: Impact on the Environmental Management of Products and Services" focuses on the intersection between sustainable consumption, corporate policies, and environmental management. This Special Issue aims to provide a platform for research exploring how sustainable consumption practices can influence the formulation of corporate policies and the environmental management of products and services. The articles presented are expected to address both theoretical and practical aspects, providing a holistic view of the challenges and opportunities in this field. This Special Issue is expected to foster interdisciplinary collaboration, bringing together researchers from economics, social sciences, environmental management, and other related fields. The articles should highlight how sustainable policies and practices can be effectively integrated to promote good management as well as environmental protection. Through this collaboration, the aim is to generate a robust body of knowledge that can guide future research and policies in the field of sustainable consumption.
