Special Issue

Sustainable Livestock and Agricultural Production: Challenges and Perspectives

Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue aims to integrate science, production, and society, providing a platform for reflection and practical solutions that support the development of resilient, efficient, and inclusive agricultural systems. The scope of this Special Issue is broad, welcoming original research on diverse aspects of sustainability in agriculture and livestock, including greenhouse gas emissions, animal welfare, resource efficiency, biodiversity, climate resilience, digital innovations. precision farming, circular economy approaches, socioeconomic factors, consumer perceptions, and public policies. Studies introducing new indicators, methodologies, or assessment models are also encouraged, without limiting authors to specific topics, as long as they contribute to advancing sustainable food production.
