

Special Issue

Strategic Management and Sustainable Competitiveness in a Tourism of Change

Message from the Guest Editors

This special issue invites all research papers and case studies with a focus on a wide range of topics that address the principles and practices of strategic management and sustainable competitiveness in the tourism industry. Potential works include those that may address, but are not limited to, the following lines:

- The relationship between strategic planning and crisis management
- Research agendas that integrate strategic management and sustainable competitiveness
- The debate around the foundational aspects of the roles of sustainability and tourism (human action)
- A review of the tourism literature on sustainability
- The relationship between resilience and sustainability (analysis of the concept of quality; the life that one values)
- New methods/research of scanning the environment for strategic management
- New technological interventions in strategic/crisis management
- The interplay of national culture, sustainable development, and strategic occurrence
- Identifying governments that tend to be the most successful at planning for crises and sustainable development efforts
