

Special Issue

Agribusiness and Rural Development

Message from the Guest Editors

Sustainability is a peer-reviewed and open access journal of environmental, cultural, economic and social sustainability of human beings. The purpose of this Special Issue is to enhance scholarly communication on agribusiness and rural development. The Special Issue is focused on (but is not limited to) the following topics:

- Conceptualization of agribusiness, agricultural economics, sustainable agriculture, and rural development;
- Socioeconomic analysis of global disruptors (e.g., COVID-19 and climate change effects) on agribusiness, rural development, environment, and sustainable agriculture;
- Food chain analysis, i.e., production, processing, and distribution, and links to rural development;
- New technology adoption (e.g., new variety, new machinery, and internet service) and its links to rural development;
- Domestic and international trade of agricultural goods;
- Policy analysis related to agriculture, environment, and rural development;
- Migrant workers, immigration policies, and national and regional economies;
- Analysis of change in consumer preference on agricultural and food products;
- Family farming vs. corporate farming.
