Research on Estimating Plastic Leakage into the Environment

Message from the Guest Editors

We invite you to submit your work providing evidence of how much, what types, and where litter is entering the environment within your country or region. The focus of this special issue is to highlight original research taking place at multiple countries around the world, with an eve to enabling comparisons at multiple scales whilst understanding key drivers that result in waste entering the environment. We invite you to include opportunities to reduce plastic and increase sustainability at local, regional and global scales in your submission. We also ask you to contextualize your research, relating your work to the growing body of existing literature on this important topic, whilst sharing information regarding relevant governance or policy related measures aimed at reducing waste leakage to the environment and/or resource recovery.
