

Special Issue

Renewable Energy – Issues and Key Solutions for Sustainable Development

Message from the Guest Editors

Fossil fuels (coal, oil and gas) are non-renewable resources, and when burned to produce energy they cause harmful greenhouse gas emissions and air pollution. The storage capacity and scarcity of fossil fuels also cause major issues for the generation of electrical power for commercial and domestic power supply demand. All of these important issues force us to explore renewable energy sources. The goal of this Special Issue is to look at and share recent advances in theory, design, modeling, application, control, environmental issues, future energy policy transitions, reviews, and case studies related to the advancement of power generation systems based on renewable energy sources as well as analysis under climatic conditions for finding sustainable solutions.

About the Journal

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

I encourage you to contribute a research or comprehensive review article for consideration for publication in Sustainability, an international open access journal which provides an advanced forum for research findings in areas related to sustainability and sustainable development. The journal publishes original research articles, reviews, conference proceedings (peer reviewed full articles) and communications. I am confident you will find the journal contributes to enhancing understanding of sustainability and fostering initiatives and applications of sustainability-based measures and activities.
