Special Issue

Sustainable Public Transportation and Accident Prevention

Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue aims to bring together emerging research on various advanced technologies and methodologies applied to address sustainable transportation issues, particularly in the areas related to public transportation and accident prevention. We expect submissions to make a step forward in understanding the economic, behavioral, theoretical, and/or empirical aspects of sustainable public transportation, as well as traffic safety. In addition, since travel behavior has been profoundly changed due to the spread of COVID-19, relevant papers contributing to this area are also welcome.

This Special Issue encourages submissions of original articles that report significant research contributions on the following topics:

sustainable public transportation planning, management, and policies;

new methodologies, technologies, and practices for achieving travel behavioral change in public transportation passengers;

behavioral changed related to traffic safety; methods or incentives for promoting public transportation use and reducing traffic accidents.
