Technologies for Sustainability in Smart Cities

Message from the Guest Editors

The lack of natural resources, overpopulation in urban areas and the pollution generated in them are worrying aspects that we are dealing with today. The population must be aware of contributing to avoid the disastrous consequences that these events can cause on the planet. Usually, many of these problems are attributed to the technological expansion and its impact on society. But, as a matter of fact, technological evolution can help alleviate these effects if used properly. Therefore, this special edition of the journal Sustainability is focused on the use of innovative technologies that, applied in cities, allow to automate and reduce the power consumption of daily activities, monitor traffic, monitor the quality of several environmental parameters and/or be able to analyze this data in order to offer recommendations to improve the parameters indicated before. To this end, new technologies in the field of machine learning and IoT...
