Special Issue

Transaction Costs and Policy Analysis

Message from the Guest Editor

This Special Issue of Sustainability welcomes theoretical and empirical contributions that aim at providing deeper insights into the effects of transaction costs on the process of designing and implementing land, planning, and environmental policy instruments. Of particular interest are studies that analyse the size, timing, and distribution of transaction costs, and their impacts on the effectiveness, efficiency, and equity of policy instruments. Empirical analyses of the policies focused on sustainability agenda are especially welcome. The geographical scope of the Special Issue is global, and contributions regarding case studies and policy instruments from both developed and developing countries will be equally relevant and welcome.
