

Special Issue

Counter Urban Migration, Commuting, and Social Sustainability in Everyday Life

Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue aims to bridge research on different kinds of population mobility by linking counter-urban migration to commuting and its role for reaching a social sustainability in everyday life. The scope of this Special Issue is to provide a platform for researchers to share their research work within the field of population mobility and social sustainability in daily life, including aspects of migration, commuting, and rural and/or urban development. Among others, the following topics are encouraged:

- Post-pandemic migration and commuting patterns;
- Counter-urbanization population movement impacts on commuting patterns;
- Social sustainability for different groups of counter urban movers;
- Social sustainability in families' everyday life as a result of counter-urban migration;
- Relations between migration motives and possibilities for working from home;
- Interconnections between different life domains in counter-urban migration decisions;
- Commuting and its impacts on social sustainability in rural and urban areas.
