

Special Issue

Frontier of Sustainable Agricultural Economics: Agrobiodiversity Conservation and Rural Governance

Message from the Guest Editors

Investing in the preservation of agrobiodiversity is of crucial importance for the economic recovery from the COVID-19 crisis. Therefore, the goal of this Special Issue is to provide a solid scientific basis relating to the following aspects of the intervention plans. The Special Issue focuses on research dealing with (but not exclusively):

- support for organic farming and agroecology;
- promotion of agricultural systems based on traditional species, varieties, and breeds;
- protection of landscape elements;
- support for precision agriculture;
- definition of new rules on animal welfare;
- cooperation and governance among firms that support agrobiodiversity;
- rules on green public procurement for solutions based on agrobiodiversity;
- public and firm decision-making processes integrated with the agrobiodiversity dimension;
- measurement of the environmental footprint of processes and products through their life cycle and accounting practices for natural capital;
- intergovernmental scientific policy platforms for agrobiodiversity and ecosystem services;
