Competitiveness of Tourism Destinations and Sustainable Destination Management

Message from the Guest Editor

This Special Issue aims to provide various perspectives for the competitiveness of tourism destinations and sustainable destination management. Each destination has attractive tangible and intangible resources. Tourism, however, can simultaneously bring positive and negative impacts on tourism destinations. Moreover, for the last two years, external forces have dramatically changed the hospitality and tourism industry. In this regard, this Special Issue invites valuable studies for sharing insightful knowledge and learning different cases for tourism competitiveness and sustainable destination management. The topics of the Special Issue may include relevant stakeholders, partnerships and collaboration, and tourists' experiences at tourism destinations. Conceptual and empirical studies on tourism competitiveness, Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs), and environmental, social, and corporate governance (ESG) are also welcomed. Research in the Special Issue can create synergy and boost collaboration to encourage actions toward sustainability at tourism destinations.
