The Innovation of Destination and Tourism's Challenge

Message from the Guest Editors

The study of the concept of innovation in tourism and tourist destinations is still in its infancy, given that tourism is currently a globally growing field, and it is necessary to better understand innovation in this sector. At the same time, companies use sustainability policies as a strategy for innovation and competitive differentiation. In order to meet the challenge of innovation in tourism and tourist destinations, we invite you to participate in the study of process innovations (such as innovations in production processes—back office—or in the delivery process—front office) and product innovations in countries with tourism potential by identifying future trends, aspects, and directions regarding their adaptation to new technologies. We appreciate well-documented theoretical and empirical approaches that are anchored in the reality of innovation in tourism destinations and tourism challenges.
