Flood Vulnerability and Resilience in Urban Settings: Perspectives for Sustainability

Message from the Guest Editors

The expected proposals should provide an innovative scope of the literature dedicated to urban resilience. Editors expect research that questions the co-construction processes necessary for the success of a resilient project. Papers in the field of risks, urban planning, urban engineering, geography, and architecture are expected. The Editors would like to see work that links the various research elements for action in urban communities, irrespective of whether at the scale of watersheds, cities, neighborhoods, or buildings. How to build viable and resilient neighborhoods? What are the ingredients for successful projects? What co-construction processes are necessary for success, and what are the obstacles and solutions?
