Greenways as a Sustainable Urban Planning Strategy

Message from the Guest Editors

We invite submissions to a Special Issue of Sustainability focused on "Greenways as a Sustainable Urban Planning Strategy". Greenways may be defined as linear parks that also serve as pedestrian and bicycle corridors, connecting diverse urban environments. We are interested the potential of such greenways to address issues of environmental sustainability and ecological resilience as well as questions of social equity and the "right to the city". Scholars have raised serious questions about highprofile greenways projects in the United States, such as New York city's High Line, Chicago's Bloomingdale Trail, and the Atlanta Beltline on local real estate markets. seeing them as a form of neoliberal redevelopment that drives gentrification and displacement while projecting an appealing green aura.
