

Special Issue

Housing and Public Health

Message from the Guest Editor

This Special Issue invites contributions about the link between housing, health, and society. The overall aim of the Special Issue is to bring together reviews and original research papers that aim to bridge public health, urban geography, housing studies, and environmental sciences in order to gather evidence for more sustainable and equitable housing and social policies. Papers can use qualitative, quantitative or mixed-methods approaches and can be conducted at different geographic (local to global) and temporal scales (past events, current situation and future scenarios).
