

Special Issue

Renewable Energy and Sustainable Tourism

Message from the Guest Editor

The shift from fossil fuels to renewable energy sources that is needed to combat global warming may either promote or undermine tourism sustainability. This Special Issue aims to expand our understanding of the links between renewable energy and sustainable tourism and welcomes reviews and empirical studies focusing on (but not limited to) the following main topics:

- Actual or perceived impact of renewable energy infrastructures on tourism;
- Adoption or social acceptance of renewable energy innovations (e.g., for electricity generation and storage) in tourist facilities;
- Low-carbon tourism mobility;
- Policies and strategies for decarbonising the tourism industry;
- Renewable energy and/or sustainable tourism;
- Residents', tourists', and/or tourism stakeholders' perceptions and attitudes towards land-based or sea-based renewable energy projects/infrastructures.
