Risk-Informed Decision-Making in Sustainable Management of Industrial Assets

Message from the Guest Editors

New concepts and approaches in AM modeling and the related decision-making process are needed. A holistic, risk-informed decision-making (RIDM) approach has appeared as a promising path forward, capable of capturing insights from various concepts, models, and their limits, the complexity and uncertainties, as well as the strength of knowledge of analysts, experts, and decision-makers. In this Special Issue of Sustainability, we invite submissions focused on "Risk-Informed Decision-Making in Sustainable Management of Industrial Assets" in the context of the overall operating and business complexity. Thus, of interest are papers that contribute to the body of knowledge by examining links between AM, resilience, and complexity as well as the impact of various influencing factors in AM decisionmaking in both quantitative and qualitative maners.
