Sustainability and Urban Stream Daylighting Research

Message from the Guest Editor

This Special Issue aims to publish high-quality inter- and cross-disciplinary research papers on stream daylighting vis-à-vis environmental, economic, and social sustainability and their interconnections. For example, among others, in terms of environmental sustainability, this Special Issue invites contributions that investigate, among others, the connections between stream daylighting, urban form, and/or environmental impacts such as reducing pollution and ameliorating climatic stressors. In terms of economic sustainability, contributions are invited on ecological economics such as valuation studies of stream daylighting's eco-services, and the monetary valuations and trade-offs of stream daylighting projects. In terms of social sustainability, this Special Issue invites contributions on the connections between stream daylighting and land use planning, spatial (in)equity/(in)justice, inclusion and exclusion, and the cultural aspects of in daylighting projects.
