

Special Issue

The Innovation Thinking of Urban Green on Human Health

Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue will have three main foci. First, we welcome papers from a variety of cultural and international settings that examine the relationships between urban nature and human wellbeing. Second, we welcome papers that present new understandings growing from measurements made using emerging tools, instruments, and wearable devices for human psychological and physiological responses to nature. Third, we welcome papers that extend recent findings regarding the effects of exposure to urban nature on human health to city planning and urban design. These papers should provide actionable guidelines for how cities might evolve in ways that promote health and wellbeing.
